More than 80% of the ocean is unexplored.

Who knows what horrors
lie beneath the surface?

What goes on down
here in the dark, dark deep?

Tomorrow is slaughter
day at the farm.

Tonight is her last night on the planet.

Just this one planet in particular, though.

GLOSSARY

BIGFOOT

Known to roam the forests of North America, Bigfoot is an apelike cryptid who is often spotted in the Pacific Northwest. Lore surrounding a mysterious forest ape has existed for thousands of years, though the Bigfoot name dates back only to the 1950s, when observers were taken aback by the size of his footprints.

CHUPACABRA

Chupacabra can literally be translated as the "goat sucker." Originally from Puerto Rico, this vampiric cryptid is said to terrorize livestock by drinking their blood. He has been described as both reptilian and doglike in appearance.

CLASSIC GHOST

Ghosts have likely been around as long as humans, as they are the souls of those of us who haven't yet crossed over to the other side. Reasons for staying Earth-side include watching over loved ones, unfinished business, or just plain ol' procrastination.

CTHULHU

Part octopus, part dragon, and part human, Cthulhu first appeared in 1928 in the short story "The Call of Cthulhu" by H. P. Lovecraft. Perhaps the most well known of Lovecraft's creatures, Cthulhu is considered a dormant god who haunts humanity's subconscious.

EXTRATERRESTRIALS

Reports of flying saucers started to boom in the 1950s, and little green men have been sighted sporadically ever since. But no one quite knows how long extraterrestrials have been watching mankind; we do know they like to be the observer and not the observed.

FLATWOODS MONSTER

The Flatwoods Monster was first spotted during the 1950s in West Virginia. She has been described as a massive humanoid with glowing red eyes. Though she somewhat resembles a witch, the Flatwoods Monster is suspected to be a misunderstood extraterrestrial.

FRESNO NIGHTCRAWLERS

The Fresno Nightcrawlers started taking strolls past California surveillance cameras during the 2000s. No one quite knows what they are, but some guesses include ghosts; aliens; or walking, haunting pants.

JACKALOPE

The Jackalope has the body of a rabbit but the antlers of a deer, making this cryptid a particularly charming interspecies hybrid. Jackalopes are a popular feature on taxidermy mounts, though one can't imagine they're too thrilled about that.

KRAKEN

The bane of sailors everywhere, the Kraken is known for targeting ships and dragging them all the way to the ocean floor since the thirteenth century. You don't want to get caught in his tentacles.

LOCH NESS MONSTER

The Loch Ness Monster, often affectionately dubbed "Nessie," was first brought to public attention in the 1930s through a series of blurry black-and-white photographs taken at Loch Ness, Scotland. She is said to resemble a plesiosaur, but even with her large stature, she seems to be particularly good at evading sonar.

MOTHMAN

Mothman was first spotted in the Point Pleasant area of West Virginia in 1966, when a couple reported seeing a "man-sized bird . . . creature . . . something." He is known for his signature bright-red glowing eyes as well as his ability to foresee disastrous events.

SIREN

Tales of sirens date back to some of the very first writings in human history. In Greek mythology, they were described as winged, birdlike creatures, but they have since taken on various forms in folklore. They currently present as half-fish, half-human, and 100 percent deadly, as they're known to use their beautiful singing voice to lure in lonely sailors.

SIREN HEAD

Siren Head is a modern cryptid created by horror artist Trevor Henderson in 2018. Siren Head's eerie wails immediately captivated people, and he has been haunting various corners of the Internet ever since.

SLEEP PARALYSIS DEMON

Another cryptid that has likely been with humanity since ancient times, the Sleep Paralysis Demon visits almost half of all people in their lifetime. His visits are usually accompanied by full-body paralysis and an overwhelming sense of dread and terror.

SLENDER MAN

Slender Man is a modern cryptid created by Eric Knudsen in 2009. Depicted as a tall, faceless man in a black suit, Slender Man often makes unexpected appearances in the background of photographs and videos. He is an adept stalker and is known to lure children into the forest with him.
